Early in the morning a recoption was tendered to the confederate reterans at capitol building. They were there in force and many comrades classed hands who had not met since the close of the war. One of the conspicuous features of the parade was the absence of all-attempts at uniforms by the veterans. They have never adopted a uniform and all of them as well as their officers, appeared in citizens attire. Mr. Depew referred to the modest life of Gen.
Grant while a citizen of Galena, and rahearsed his entrance into and early experiences in the army which was raised to quell the rebollion. Grant's career will be the paradox of history. Grant, at the age of 6) years, was an obscure leather merchant in Galena. As a cadet at West Point he had firem only just above the middle of his classe. As a subaltern on the frontier and in Mexico he had done no more than perform his duty with the courage and capacity of the average West Pointer. He had pursued agriculture with his customary conscientious care and industry. He was not alruid to do the work of the farm himself nor ashamed to ride into St. Louis This bold statement seemed to completely take away the breath of the aumurmur of astonishment, not un-mixed with dismay and some irritation, and taking several seconds, swept the Leipsic, Sophie and Alexandrine, North Many like breakers on a rocky coast.
